ABSTRACT

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers administers the National Wetland Plant List (NWPL) for the United States (U.S.) and its territories. Responsibility for the NWPL was transferred to the Corps from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in 2006. The list had not been updated since 1988, and the Corps led an interagency effort to revise the list by 2012. As part of the authorization of the revised NWPL in 2012, new methods were adopted for annual updates to the scientific names and wetland ratings. This paper presents the first annual update of the 2012 list. The 2012 list contained 7,828 species, and the 2013 update presented here contains 7,937 species. The increase of 109 species is due to nomenclature and taxonomic changes, species that were added by request, and new records from the literature and herbarium records. There was a change of 327 wetland ratings nationally during the 2013 update.

Background

Since the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (Corps) assumed administrative responsibilities for the National Wetland Plant List (NWPL) in 2006, the list has gone through an extensive updating process that culminated in its authorization for national use in May 2012 (Federal Register 2012, Lichvar 2012). The development of the 2012 list was a cooperative effort between four federal government agencies: the Corps, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS), the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS). The effort was managed by a National Panel consisting of representatives from the four agencies. The 2012 NWPL is the standard reference for wetland indicator status ratings of vascular plants in the United States and is used for many purposes, including wetland delineation, assessment, mitigation, and habitat restoration. The NWPL is available to all users through a web application (http://wetland_plants.usace.army.mil/).

The 2012 update built on the legacy of the FWS's 1988 (Reed 1988) and draft 1996 wetland plant lists. It integrated all current taxonomic views along with revised wetland ratings (Lichvar and Minkin 2008). Additionally, the 2012 revision included several changes to the management of the NWPL, along with revised definitions of wetland categories, new Corps geographic wetland regions, protocols for challenging wetland ratings, and procedures for annual revisions.

The five wetland rating categories in the NWPL were developed in the 1980s by Reed (1988). Each plant species was assigned a rating representing the estimated probability, or frequency, with which it is thought to occur in wetlands, as opposed to non-wetlands, across its entire range. The 1988 ratings were divided into categories based on quantitative ranges of frequency, but the 2012 ratings were based on simpler qualitative definitions (Lichvar et al. 2012) (Table 1). Indicator status ratings are now assigned to each species based on a thorough review of the botanical literature and herbarium records, along with the best professional judgment of national and regional experts. Longer quantitative rating definitions are still used, but only for field testing of wetland ratings.

Table 1. Short qualitative descriptions of the five wetland indicator status ratings used to determine if vegetation is hydrophytic during wetland delineations in the United States.

Indicator status rating (abbreviation)	Designation	Qualitative Description (Lichvar et al. 2012)
Obligate (OBL)	Hydrophyte	Almost always occur in wetlands
Facultative Wetland (FACW)	Hydrophyte	Usually occur in wetlands, but may occur in non-wetlands
Facultative (FAC)	Hydrophyte	Occur in wetlands and non-wetlands
Facultative Upland (FACU)	Nonhydrophyte	Usually occur in non-wetlands, but may occur in wetlands
Upland (UPL)	Nonhydrophyte	Almost never occur in wetlands

As with previous versions of the wetland plant list, the 2012 NWPL supports wetland delineation efforts under Sec. 404 of the Clean Water Act and the Swampbuster provisions under the Farm Bill, and it is used in the National Wetland Inventory Program. To accomplish this more effectively, the Corps re-aligned the NWPL's geographic regions to correspond to those of Federal wetland efforts, including the interagency wetland delineation manual and its regional wetland delineation supplements. The NWPL is now divided using the 10 regional Corps wetland delineation regions for the U.S. and its territories (Wakeley 2002) (Fig. 1). Included within four of these Corps regions are 17 subregions in which small numbers of wetland plants have wetland ratings that differ from the ratings for the same plants in the rest of the region (Appendices B–E).

Annual Update Process

As part of the 2012 NWPL update, representatives from each of the four Federal agencies responsible for the NWPL agreed on new protocols and procedures for managing the list. These procedures were described in the 2012 Federal Register announcement for updating the NWPL. Under the NWPL authorization, it is now possible to update and maintain the list annually so that the nomenclature and taxonomy do not become outdated and wetland ratings can be refined as new information is available. In particular, the annual NWPL updates will include additions or deletions to the list; modifications to wetland indicator statuses that were revised during the previous year; and updates of the nomenclature, taxonomy, and geographic distribution of species on the NWPL.

The annual update of the list has two steps. First, the database is updated for nomenclature, taxonomy, and U.S. state/Canadian province and U.S. county-level phytogeography by Dr. John Kartesz of the Biota of North America (BONAP) (http://www.bonap.org). Second, input from the public, as well as from Federal and state agencies, is used to modify wetland ratings by processes of evaluation that are similar to those used during the 2012 update. These requests may include adding new species to the list.

The annual update is released in three parts: 1) the NWPL web site is updated to reflect any modifications from the previous year, 2) a series of downloadable files for the Corps regions and states is made available via the web site, providing local lists of wetland species and their wetland indicator ratings, and 3) the national list is published and subdivided by Corps regions. This publication represents the third component of the 2013 update.

The 2013 NWPL Update

The 2012 NWPL contained 7,828 species of wetland plants. The 2013 NWPL increased by 109 species, so it now includes 7,937 wetland plants for the United States and its territories. The increase in number was due to various factors, including changes in taxonomy, new literature reports, and newly suggested additions to the list. The final 2013 NWPL is listed in the appendices.

Taxonomic changes made by BONAP since the 2012 list have both added to and subtracted from the NWPL. Species dropped from the list included taxonomic merges that reduced the list by 49 species, two erroneously reported species not occurring in North America, and one invalid name (Table 2). The merged species, now treated as synonyms, were deleted from the list since they were combined with other taxa. Also, eight former wetland species were merged into four new species that were not previously recognized. These four new species were added to the list (Table 3). Prior 2012 wetland indicator ratings were applied to these new names since all former names had the same wetland ratings. When taxa with different wetland ratings were merged into one (e.g., one former taxon was FAC and the other FACW), new wetland ratings were assessed by the Regional and/or National Panels. Of the four new species added to the list based on mergers, only Rhododendron columbianum (Piper) Harmaja and Zeltnera muehlenbergii (Griseb.) G. Mans. required reevaluation due to conflicts in prior wetland ratings.

In addition to the BONAP revisions, users requested that 112 wetland species be either reevaluated or added to the 2013 list. These requests were processed through standardized protocols. Each request was first evaluated by a Regional Panel (RP) consisting of one representative from each of the four agencies within the Corps regions where the species occurs. The RP reviewed the literature, interviewed other professional botanists, and used their personal field observations to assign wetland ratings. If the RP was in dispute about assigning a rating, the National Panel assigned the final wetland ratings. The species for which new or further review was requested are shown in Table 3 and are listed on the NWPL web site (http://wetland_plants.usace.army.mil/).

The addition and reevaluation of 112 species resulted in 119 changes in wetland ratings at the national level. Twelve species that were already on the NWPL were reevaluated. Nine species were added in more than one Corps region. Seven others were determined to be UPL. Overall, these new additions, reevaluations, and nomenclature changes represent only a 1.2% change from the 2012 list. The resulting wetland ratings for the annual update are nearly evenly divided between the four wetland ratings categories in each of the 10 Corps wetland regions (Table 4). The exception is Hawaii, because the South Pacific Island subregion is dominated by FACU species.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many people, agencies and organizations are involved in maintaining and improving the accuracy of the NWPL, and they are all thanked for their support and input. The bulk of the effort and thanks goes to the National and Regional Panel members across the country who dedicate significant time and energy responding to requests to evaluate endless lists of wetland plants. Many people in the public sector have made valuable suggestions and input about wetland species. Underlying these efforts is the work of several key people, who are thanked: John Kartesz at BONAP, who keeps the database updated, and Misako Nishino, who maintains the BONAP database; Rick Bates and John Guineau, who manage to keep millions of data points in the right places; and Jennifer Gillrich and Lindsey Lefebvre, who make it all happen. We thank the Wetland Regulatory Assistance Program of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for funding these efforts.
